

Managing Construction Risk Amidst the Coronavirus - A Legal Perspective

NOVEMBER 10, 2020

4:00 – 5:00 PM via Zoom Meetings

If you are involved in construction, either on the design and construction side or the supply side, you need to manage risk. And all of your risks have increased exponentially during this pandemic. On November 10, attorney Lisa Wampler of Cohen Seglias will discuss and explain the relevant contractual provisions that can both expose and protect your company in light of the impact of the coronavirus pandemic as well as give some tips and tricks on how to best position yourself to ensure payment during these unprecedented times. Come and learn how you can protect yourself.

SPEAKER:

Lisa Wampler, Esq., Cohen Seglias

Lisa is a trusted advisor to her clients throughout the construction process. With an active and diverse construction litigation practice, she represents owners, general contractors, construction managers, and the different trades in complex matters involving all phases of the construction process. Lisa has substantial experience serving electrical and mechanical subcontractors and is cognizant of their specific needs.

Lisa works with her clients to manage risks to avoid litigation when possible. This includes negotiating and reviewing contracts to prevent future issues. She also advises clients on preparing claims for extra work, inefficiencies, delays, and changed conditions while construction is ongoing for both private and public sector projects.

As Managing Partner of the firm's Pittsburgh office, Lisa oversees client relations, staffing, and hiring in the office. She founded the firm's Women's Initiative, promoting the development of the professional women, and serves as its Chair.

She is a graduate of The Dickinson School of Law of the Pennsylvania State University, J.D., and Pennsylvania State University, B.A. and was recently listed in "Best Lawyers® in America" for Construction Litigation.
